Force is transmitted in accordance to the generated sine wave to the sample, through the probe, by means of the function generator. At this time, the strain produced in the sample is detected by the differential transformer and produces a signal that expresses the dynamic viscoelasticity of the sample from the force and the strain.